Soviet Women Do Most Farm Work

Women make up approximately 90 per cent of the farm labor force in Russia, the Kiwanis club was told Wednesday. Lester Stone, who has worked for the Central Intelligence Agency, addressed the group at a meeting in the Lafayette Hotel.

Stone, who traveled with a group of farmers on an exchange trip to Russia, told of his experiences and discussed the working and living conditions of the people and their methods of farming.

Although he performed several duties for the Central Intelligence Agency, Stone said the trip was at his own expense. It was made at the same time 30 Russian farmers were visiting the United States.
